FEATURE...

SAN FRANCISCO--(BUSINESS WIRE FEATURES)--Tired of spending countless hours in a greeting card shop searching for the perfect card?

Search no longer... Surprise and delight your friends, relatives and business associates with a "historical" greeting card you can create yourself using Spectrum Unlimited's News of the Past. With News of the Past, an easy-to-use IBM PC-compatible software program, you simply enter a date and name.

You can then display or print a "fact sheet" containing a fascinating array of events, music, sports and entertainment trivia highlighting that special day.

To create these fact sheets, News of the Past draws from its comprehensive database, which contains American historical information dating from 1900 including more than 9,000 discoveries, inventions, prominent events and other fun categories such as "Events of the Month," "Academy Award Winners," "Cost of Living Comparison," and

"Other Famous People Born on the Same Day."

News of the Past comes with a supply of standard professional-looking certificates that are suitable for all occasions and can be loaded into any dot matrix printer. Three additional types of certificates are also available separately for other special times you want to celebrate. They include:

Birthday, for a unique, personalized birthday greeting

Special Day, perfect for anniversaries and weddings

On This Day, for a variety of occasions

News of the Past -- a simple way to give a special gift of knowledge, and a great way to create a time-capsule that illustrates the world around us during each of the major milestones of our lives. News of the Past, Version 5, retails for $49.95. Additional certificates are priced separately. For more information, please call 800/999-9687 or 415/647-1070, or FAX 415/647-7876.

Reporter's Digital How-To

Find important biographies at <http://www.s9.com>

Biographies are as central to newsroom reference books as encyclopedias and that old, dusty copy of Who's Who in America you've stashed back in the library. But these fine, old printed resources are rather badly name-dependent. In other words, if you know the name of the subject you are researching, you're in tall cotton. However, the old books are less effective when you need to know:

- * Who discovered sodium?
- * What composer wrote "A Bicycle Built for Two" and when?
- * Industrialists associated with the city of Chicago.
- * Identities of political contemporaries of Woodrow Wilson.

For these and other tough nuts, turn to the Internet's Biographical Dictionary, where you can delve into more than 25,000 entries, searching not only by name, but also by keyword (such as positions held, professions, and literary and artistic works) and by important dates, including the subject's birth or death. The site also supports sophisticated advanced options for narrowing and broadening a search with Boolean expressions and with wild cards.

* Names of British prime ministers, U.S. cartoonists or the author of Ethan Frome.

To use this electronic reservoir, click on "Search the Dictionary" on the introductory page. The resulting display gives you data entry fields for name, keyword and/or date. Fill in one or more of the fields and click on the "Submit" button. Keep it as simple as possible and the data can be entered in either upper- or lowercase or a combination of the two. Often, a last name is sufficient for finding the bio you need, but if you choose, you can add a first name or initials.

Use the keyword field to search by profession, award, written work, ethnic group, theatrical role, or any other characteristic or distinctions. You can also enter fictional characters to retrieve information about actors who played the role and authors who have written about the characters. You also can enter a word like "nylon" to retrieve information about anyone in the database generally associated with the material.

Regarding the date field, note that dates alone usually produce too many results to be useful, but the field is effective when used in tandem with keywords. For example, you might enter the keyword "basketball" and the date "1990" to retrieve information about people with significant accomplishments in the sport during that year.

For more detailed work, click on the search form's "Advanced Search." This provides a single data entry field in which you can link multiple search strategies with symbols for "AND" to narrow a search ("orator AND historian") and "OR" to broaden a search ("king OR queen"). You also can use quotation marks to search for an entire string of words ("Bicycle Built for Two"). The asterisk is a wild card representing one or more letters (as in "[comput.sup.*]" while the period represents a single letter ("organi.ation").

The only drawback to the Biographical Dictionary is the shallowness of some of the entries, many of which are a single, pithy paragraph of facts and figures. For more depth, you might want to supplement your research here with a quick visit to the database of the Arts and Entertainment Network's Biography television show (www.biography.com/bio). Here, the search options are quite limited, but if you know the name of the person you want, the resulting text is more detailed.

Other considerations for using the Biographical Dictionary:

1. Don't miss the "Links" option on the introductory page. This connects you to a whole host of other biographical Web sites for special people, including recent obituaries, authors, popes, birthdays of famous people, British royalty, world and Washington leaders, movie personalities, Nobel and Pulitzer prize winners, scientists and others.

2. If you are unsure of the name of a person you are seeking in the database, click on the option on the search form for the Spelling Wizard. This lets you enter your best guess at the name so it can search for entries of people with similar spellings.

3. Finally, nicknames also can be entered in the fields. The word "Sting" entered in the name field would return the biographical entry of British rock singer Gordon Matthew Summer, whose stage name is "Sting." But note that if you enter "Sting" in the keyword field, the database lists biographies of people associated with the 1973 movie of the same name.

Gale Research, Inc. (Detroit, MI) has announced that 11 of their biography databases are now available on MDC's NEXIS (r) online service. "Gale Biographies" contains over 100,000 profiles of noted world figures from the following printed sources: 'Almanac of Famous People', 'America's Religious Leaders', 'Black Writers', 'Contemporary Musicians', 'Heroes and Heroines', 'Hispanic Writers', 'Newsmakers', 'Who's Who Among Black Americans...

...in Technology'. Each of the profiles contains details with both the personal and professional lives of individuals. Full text essays provide information such as personal statistics, birth/death dates, family, education, career summaries, awards, works, and sources of additional information as well as fielded directory -type entries. Background information is also provided on occupation, career history, professional and civic affiliations, special achievements, published works, military service, and home and business addresses. The database will be updated and supplemented quarterly, depending on each publication's production schedules.

Indicates that the Anybirthday.com Web site claims to have more than 135 million birthdays , although it is certainly missing a lot of people. Says that it is also not the best source for celebrity birthdays as a search for Frank Sinatra yields 25 results sorted by zip code, and even if the searcher looks for Francis Albert Sinatra, there would be zero results. Mentions, however, that the simple search of using first name, last name and zip code, may well allow the searcher to track down the birthday of a friend or coworker, and then request an electronic mail reminder one week before the special day. Indicates that if the searcher is worried about the privacy implications of the site, a quick ``Opt Out'' procedure allows him/her to remove his/her own record from the database . (EPE)
